Officially controlled

Farmers, processors, distributors, retailers and importers must adhere to strict EU rules if they want to use the EU organic logo.

Operators notify and describe their activity to the authority responsible for organic controls in their Member State;

Operators are inspected by a public or private control body. If the result is positive, operators receive a certificate and can market their products as organic;

Operators are inspected at least once per year to ensure that they respect organic rules.

Whenever you buy organically certified food, you can be confident that it has been produced in accordance with strict EU environmental and animal welfare rules, and is checked regularly.
